Words and music by Tom Savre © 1997

Twilight - crystal silence broken by the distant cry of a loon

Soft light - Venus burning bright over the horns of the setting crescent moon

Whispered rumor of a breeze murmurs through the aspen leaves - night is falling, calling us outside

To be enchanted - as the planet plays through a rhythm change - and we're caught up in the tide

Midnight – overhead a heron glides in silhouette across the Milky Way

Starlight – a billion distant fires guide the creatures of the dark along their way

I hear coyote out there somewhere singing in the cool night air - leather wing bat dips and turns and glides

Just like they're dancing - as the seasons turn and the days slip by - they're dancing on the tide

(Instrumental break)

Daybreak – blackbirds singing across the lake - a muskrat glides along the shore

Sunrise – throwing crimson flames across the sky - a dusty rose lights our door

The sun comes up another day - nighttime shadows fade away - by turns we laugh - we sing we dance we cry

But we all know - that seasons come and seasons go - they ebb and flow like the tide

The sun comes up another day - nighttime shadows fade away - by turns we laugh - we sing we dance we cry

But we all know - that seasons come and seasons go - they ebb and flow like the tide

So don't hold back the tide
